A HARD AND HOPELESS GAME FOR DAVY.

PUCK

"GAME (AND LOVE) IN SEASON."

"A CANVAS-BACK would do for me,— Suppose you order that?" said she.
And so on duck the darling fed,
While my poor purse unduly bled,
Yet always uncomplainingly.

So kind she was, so full of glee,
That day I was her devotee!
How could I guess I 'd cause to dread
A canvas-back?

But as her taste remains, you see,
The same in love, she 's jilted me;
The game has fairly turned her head,
And, till the foot-ball season 's fled,
The favored man is sure to be
A canvas-back!

Frank Roe Batchelder.

THAT "FIVE MINUTE WALK."

CITILY.—Commuter is n't late at the office, nowadays. Has he moved into the city?

MADISON.—No; but he 's got a bicycle to ride the five-minutes' walk between his house and the Lonelywood station, and he can scorch the distance now in nine minutes.

THE MOST dangerous thing is to call a liar a liar.

A BANANA SKIN—The average fruit dealer.

A CHANCE FOR GENERAL INSTRUCTIONS.

THE FARMER.—First time I go to teown I 'm goin' to see that new doctor. They say he 's a drefful smart man.

HIS WIFE.—What do you want to see him for?

THE FARMER.—Want to ask him what almanac he 'd recommend if one of us was took sick.

CLARA.—He asked me to marry him last night.

MAUDE.—Did you ever see anyone propose so awkwardly?

PAPA.—Can't you find anything better to do than reading about prize fighters?

NOT ONE OF COIN'S FINANCIAL SCHOOL.

AUCTIONEER.—There is a handsome vellum bound copy of Ruskin's "Ethics of the Dust;" what will you offer, Mr. Cohenstein?

MR. COHENSTEIN.—Nodding! Dose Shecawgo books on der money quvestion make me sick!

IT MAY be better to deserve success, but most of us would be satisfied to command it.

A TRAGIC RECITAL.

"ADVENTURES?" MODESTLY replied Alkali Ike, to the question of the inquiring young tourist from the East. "Eh-yah, I 've had a few little scrapes of one kind an' another in my time, but nuthin' that you could really call adventures. Nacher'l enough, bein' a man of the world, I 've been shot by Injuns four or five times, an' stabbed an' the like a time or two by personal friends, an' lost in a few blizzards, an' mixed up in an occasional fight, an' narrerly escaped lynchin' twice for one thing an' another, an' tarred-an'-feathered quite numerously, an' run over an' lavishly horned by about a thousand stampeded steers, an' drug across the township with a lariat-rope around my fool neck by my own broncho, which had previously bucked me off an' then kicked me senseless before I hit the ground, an' pretty tollable near brained with the butt of a revolver in the hands of a Presidin' Elder, an' shot in the back by a charmin' young grass-widder lady for a little suthin' or ruther, an' branded by a gang of drunken cowboys, an' ripped an' torn an' sech like by several kinds of varmints; but, after all, thar hain't nuthin' happened to me really worth callin' an adventure."

"My goodness!" ejaculated the tourist. "If you do not call those adventures, I should like to know what you do call them?"

"Aw!" returned the modest Isaac; "I reckon 'episodes' is about the proper word. But, come to think about it, thar was one little circumstance that happened to me that mebby you might call an adventure. I was traipsin' around in the mountains, the time I 'm speakin' of, with a huntin' party, an' one day I sets out up the cañon alone, sorter lookin' for a grizzly. I found him after a spell. I 'm crawlin' along on a narrer shelf of rock, whur the side of the cañon towered up quite a piece in the air above me an' fell off on the other side in a sheer precipice to the bottom of the gulch, about a thousand feet below. Wal, bime-bye, I comes to whur the shelf ends against the blank wall, an' I 'm sorter figgerin' on turnin' an' crabbin' back over the trail, when, all of a sudden, yere comes the grizzly I 'm lookin' for, rumblin' around an elbow in the trail behind me, lookin' as big as a load of hay an' as savage as a buzz-saw."

"Good heavens!" exclaimed the listener; "how did you feel?"

"Sorter streaked, thank ye! Thar I was, hemmed in like a cat in a bag, on that thar narrer shelf, with the snow-capped mountain above me an' the roarin' cattyract beneath me, as they say in stories; with a solid wall of rock before me an' a rampin', ragin' grizzly bear behind me, gnashin' his teeth a whole lot an' growlin' shameful. The varmint utters a hidjus roar an' comes at me, a-faunchin'. I throws up my rifle like this an' pumps a slug into him, which same he don't mind no more than a sugar-coated pill. With one sweep of his mighty paw he knocks my gun spinnin' into the abyss below, an' nacher'l enough I begins for to pick at the coverlid an' grow blue around the mouth. An' then — Har? What 's that, Hank? Why, shore, yes! I reckon you 'll have to excuse me now, Mr. Eastman; Hank Bitters is hollerin' for me to come over to the Red Light an' take a little suthin' with him. So long! See you later."

"But, heavens, man! Tell me how you escaped? There you were, completely at the mercy of the monster who was on the point of devouring you. What did you do?"

"Aw! I jest stayed thar an' let him devour me."

THE MODERN MANNER.

MRS. CHURCHLEIGH.—Our minister was never in the war; how did he ever obtain his sobriquet of "The Fighting Parson?"

MR. CHURCHLEIGH.—'Cause he talks so darn much, I s'pose.

HIS SAD STORY.

LADY OF THE HOUSE.—A big strong man like you ought to be ashamed to beg! Why don't you go to work?

RAGGED HAGGARD (at the door).—I can't git no work at me trade, Maddim; I 'm a professional airyknot.

"A what?"

"Airyknot — flyin'-machine man, Maddim. I invented a flyin'-machine that would actually fly, an' I would have made me everlastin' fortune but for an accident. Half de capitalists in de State was present when de day of trial came. De machine went up all right, but de propeller got outer gear somehow when it was about half a mile up in de air, an' dere de blamed machine stuck an' never did come down ag'in. An' dem capitalists said I was a rank fraud an' blacklisted me, an' I hain't never been able to git a job at me trade since."

NATURAL ENOUGH.

MAUDE.—Did you ever notice how Algernon's face lights up when he talks?

GEORGE.—Well! you know he 's lantern-jawed.

IF WISHES were trolleys there would be fewer beggars.

WHEN A woman will, she will. Most of the exceptions to the rule are unmarried.

AN OLD SAYING.

AS I OBSERVE my course in this strange world,
Which lately I began to journey through,
I find within me an incessant wish
That I could eat my cake, and have it, too.

I want to have an income never scant,
And earn it fairly as my honest pay,
Yet lie in bed an hour beyond my sleep,
And read a pleasant novel every day.

I want to be a specialist in law,
Of physic and theology the pride,
A faultless linguist and a writer skilled,
A thorough business man, and much beside.

I want to be reform's bold pioneer,
Whose mighty struggle breaks the whole world's bands,
Yet never be at discord with my friends,
Nor have dull opposition tie my hands.

I want to have a hero's character,
Strong by experience of self-control,
Yet be henceforward rid of all this wish
To eat and have, that frets away my soul.

WILD WESTERN WAYS.

EASTERNER WHO wants a broncho
In a Western wild,
Will be told, by "all the outfit,"
"Safe fur any child!"

Or, perhaps, they 'll say, with candor,
"Some'at playful creetur—
Might bunch-grass hisself a leetle—
Jest a sorter teeter.

"Reg'lar pet, like; kids all ride 'im:
Jed an' Sal an' sich—
Never know'd 'im wus than cat hop;
Could n't make him pitch!"

And the guileless Eastern tender
Foot is, so to speak,
Bucked so high he thinks he 's leaving
For, at least, a week!

OFTEN THE CASE.

DEACON GOODMAN. — Oh! as the Scripture says, "Pride goes before destruction."

BULLER. — Yes, Deacon; many a man comes to grief on Wall Street, through an overbearing disposition.

ALMOST A TRAGEDY.

"Throw up your hands, or I fire!"

The burglar turned and looked into the muzzle of a pistol in the firm hand of a courageous woman.

"Huh!" he said; "yer could n't hit me if yer tried."

"Yes, I could," was her calm reply; "I have practiced for years, and I never miss my mark."

A thought struck him. "Shoot away!" he said; "but if yer do hit me, it will muss up this new Bokhara rug."

Heroine as she was, femininity yet asserted itself, and he departed unmolested, chuckling over his ill-gotten gains.

DRUMMER.— Uncle Swayback is an old settler, is n't he?

SQUAM CORNERS MERCHANT. —You might call him an old resident, but he ain't no old settler — he 's been owin' me for more than twenty years.

JUST AS GOOD, IF NOT BETTER.

PROF. FADSHARPE.—This is execrable! abominable! Those wretched printers have put "objective" in place of "subjective" all through my paper on "Adumbrations of Primordial Sub-Consciousness." It 'll ruin my reputation.

FRIEND.— Not at all. It 's a brilliant success. Why, the critics say it shows remarkable profundity and opens up an entirely new vein of metaphysical thought.

PROF. FADSHARPE.— H'm! Wonder if I better correct it or let it go and found a new school of philosophy.

AN EASY JOB.

FRIEND.— Is London as foggy as they say?

RETURNED TRAVELER.— Is it? Why, a London weather prophet must have a regular sinecure!

THE SIAMESE TWINS' mother knocked their heads together. "Take that!" she observed.

"That 's a poor rule," they remarked, "about two heads being better than one."

They had never felt their position so acutely.

THE CASE OF SAHIB BLESSINGTON.

(By our Patent Kipling.)

"What care we for caste? Stay with us in our need; ask but thy wage and it shall be paid. Are there not souls for sale? Therefore, why should thy servitude be above price?" — Sayings in the "Foot Hills."

IT ALL happened after Sahib Blessington took a bungalow in the Jheersi foothills. Outertoun could have told him better, as he did when Col. Bullroar contemplated the same move; but, since that, Outertoun had learned things, and he forbore.

Blessington's bungalow was no different from hundreds of others in that district, and the Blessington household gods were duly installed, although Dhan Mahkharty, the buldoo, shook his head.

The manifestations commenced on the first night; strange humming noises were heard, and eerie creatures floated through the dark. Blessington arose, white and haggard, save for curious marks on his hands and face. The same thing was noticeable with the rest of the household.

That day the ayah left them; and Jhim, the punkah coolie, went round the place muttering. The next day the khitmagar was missing. Blessington grew more haggard as the days went on. On the tenth day Dhan Mahkharty, the buldoo, presented himself.

"The ways of these people are not the ways of mine, O heaven-born!" he said. "Here winged evil spirits come singing in the night to suck one's blood. Pay me my wage, that I may depart to mine own people."

The woman from the Cherri Hill district, who did their cooking, left the currie bowl and came forward at this.

"Neither can I stay here, Sahib," she said, "in this land of lonesomeness. So have I told the mem sahib these many days. Though she hath added a rupee to my hire, yet my heart is heavy and I go."

So Blessington paid them, and they left. He hired more servants; but it was all the same. None would stay in the bungalow in the Jheersi foothills.

One day Outertown came down from his station further up the line; and Blessington broke down, and, weeping like a woman, told him all.

Outertown puffed thoughtfully on his cheroot.

"It 's a bad case, Blessington," he said; "and what a cad I 've been not to tell you before! But the truth is, this place is accursed. You 'll never be able to keep a servant so long as you live in the suburbs!"

The next week Blessington moved back to Harlem.

A bungalow in the Jheersi foothills is crumbling into decay; rats, bats and cats are its sole occupants.

Some day the mortgage will close in on these and crush them to death.

CARTOONS AND COMMENTS.

A PICAYUNE POLITICIAN.

FOREIGNERS ARE very fond of saying that Americans have so exaggerated an idea of what they call "smartness" as to be willing to accept it in palliation or excuse of dishonest, unworthy acts. This is not in the least true of our people; although it is true that the great American sense of humor enables us to smile at the cleverness of the trick, even while we condemn and punish the trickster. In fact, there is no country where the audacity and ingenuity of the political, social and financial adventurer is so generally estimated at its true value, and is so little liable to confuse or dazzle the public. If we look over the list of the so-called "smart" men who have been successful in politics or business by the use of devious and discreditable means, we shall find that in every case the adventurer's "smartness" was backed up by solider qualities, such as courage, far-sightedness, patience in defeat, and self-control in success. In such cases, qualities of this sort, even when misused, frequently command a certain respect, often reluctantly given, not from sympathy, but from a sense of justice. But for the man who tries to get along among straightforward Americans by the exercise of "smartness" alone, without morality, principle, courage or devotion behind it, there is no possible chance of escape from ultimate detection and discredit.

But if a man has smartness and nothing else for his stock in trade, he is not, naturally, willing to believe this hard, cold truth; and Mr. David B. Hill does not believe it. Smartness has been the guiding star of his life. It has served to lead him to his first successes, and to show him the way, in years past, to place and power — and he can not understand why it should not serve his turn just as well on the longer and more dangerous journey to which his inordinate ambition has tempted him. He can not see the "Thus Far and No Further!" which is written for all men of his class whose political ambitions carry them beyond the scope of their moral and mental capacities — even though the commonest man in the land can read the sign. If policy, diplomacy, trickery, cunning, or any device of snake-like skill could avail to get David B. Hill into the White House, he would have been there before this. But every revelation that he gives of his capabilities, as an astute, ingenious, and wholly unprincipled politician, and his total inability to conceive of any higher thing in statesmanship, only makes more plain to the people his unworthiness for the office he seeks.

When we say "unprincipled," we speak of Mr. Hill, of course, as a politician and not as a man. Personally, his character is unquestioned; and where considerations of politics do not affect the performance of his duty, he has shown undeniable ability as a public officer. But where such influences do affect his actions, he has shown such a shameless willingness to betray the people's trust for partisan or private ends, that he has utterly lost whatever share of popular confidence may have been given to him, by reason of his freedom from corruption, in the coarser sense of the word. He never will learn the lesson which the people have been giving, free of charge, for the last eleven or twelve years — that is, that they will not choose for their national leader a man who is not willing to take his side, bravely and frankly, on every great issue of principle, willing to stand or fall by what he believes; faithful alike, in defeat or victory, to the cause in which he stands pledged to his followers, be they few or many. He has not yet learned this lesson, and he never will learn it — for he is smart, and he is too smart, and he is nothing else.

FOOLISH AND WICKED.

SENATOR CHANDLER'S declaration of war on England is silly enough in all conscience, and is almost funny in its impertinence; but it is such an outrageously unpatriotic and generally mischievous abuse of the decent privileges of the press that not even its pettiness ought to save it from the severest condemnation. The mischief that such cheap braggart talk works among ignorant and narrow minds is much more serious than saner and wiser people suppose. It is absolutely of one kind: with the incendiary ravings of men like Debs and his accomplices; with the scandalous and slanderous indecencies of the A. P. A., and with the murderous talk of the alien anarchists who wave the red flag of blood. It excites a fever of discontent and dishonest greed among the misled thousands who hope to better their condition, not by honest toil and intelligent industry, but by some form of public disorder which will enable them to prey upon those better off than themselves. And even to people of whose better education better things might be expected, it presents the temptation of the sudden acquisition of war-time wealth. The hideous and awful disaster of a great war presents countless opportunities to the gambler, the speculator, to the man who seeks to get something for nothing, and to the harpies who are ever willing to turn the need of a distressed nation to their own dishonest ends. In the case of such people we must admit such excuse as may be offered by their necessities. But for Senator Chandler, who deliberately strives — pitiful as is his attempt — to disturb the peace of two nations bound together by every financial and commercial interest, there is no excuse. He has done a mean, a miserable, and an unpatriotic thing.

A PRACTICAL DEMONSTRATION.

SMYTHE.—I hear that Dr. Fourthly preached against the stage for two mortal hours last Sunday.

TOMPKINS.—Yes; it was a very effective discourse. Every one present has been dead against continuous performances ever since!

HIS STATUS.

TELLER.—In his speech last night, Colonel Windbagger, the prominent politician likened himself to one of the armor-plates on the Ship of State.

GRIMSHAW.—H'm! He would have been nearer correct if he had called himself a blow-hole in one of the armor-plates.

THE OTHER SYMPATHIZER WON.

BROWN.—I hear that Shouter does not sympathize with Cuba so deeply as he did.

JONES.—No; Shouter's district gave twelve hundred plurality against him.

HIS INTERPRETATION.

FIRST CITIZEN (at the bulletin boards, election night).—What 's that the Daily Organ says? "The election is close, and the result is in doubt—"

YORK STATE.

YOU WAS?
Born in York State?
What part?
What!

Up there in the middle—
What they call "Atween the Lakes"?
Why, man, I come from there, myself!
Why!—My Goodness!—Mercy!—Sakes!
Ain't it strange

That we two York State fellers
Should 'a' run together here,
Away down South in Dixie.
In the Winter time o' year,
An' the both 'f us from right "Atween
the Lakes?"

No,—ain't a-livin' up there now,
But 't was there I was a boy,
An' there 's the only place my life
Was ever strictly full of joy.

There 's a somethin' 'bout the people
There 'round them little lakes,
That makes 'em kinda dif'r'nt
From the ordinary makes

That you find in other sections,—
More hull-hearted like, an' free,
More goodnatureder an' cordial,
An' a heap more neighborly.

'N I 've never found 'em any place,
I 've ever lived at sence,
Though I don't suppose 't everybody 'd
See the difference.

Say,—it 's done me good to meet you,
Seems to kinda take me back
To them ol' happy days ag'in,—
It does, an' that 's a fac';

'Cause I 'm allus kinda homesick
Fur the old Cayugy Lake,
An' Seneky an' Willer Crik;
I am, an' no mistake.

An' I 'd like to see T'ughannock Falls,
An' climb around the Glen,
An' drive across to Hector
'S our people used to when
Camp meetin' was goin' on.

An' I s'pose I 'm sort o' biased,
But I allus 've contended
'T the middle part o' York State 's
Where the Lord at first intended
Plantin' Eden.

Pabst Malt Extract . . . .

There is substance to it;

The "BEST" Tonic

BEGINS WITH EGYPT

MR. BREEDWELL (angrily).—It 's of no use kicking about my going out every night and leaving you here alone! You should find some little employment to amuse you instead of sitting there fretting the whole evening.

MRS. BREEDWELL.—It may be as he says. Well, I will try some light task to amuse myself. Now, let me see what I can do.

"George, you were right. I have n't been at all lonely to-night. How do you like the decoration I painted on the wall? Are n't those reds and greens brilliant?

"What! don't like those beautiful mottos? Oh, how cruel of you to say so, when the working of them has kept me from being lonely every night for a whole week!

"Now, just look how I have been amusing myself for the last few nights. I put all that old antique furniture up in the garret, and made this, myself, out of a flour-barrel, and this out of a soap-box. I got the full directions out of The Ladies' Own. Are n't they beautiful?

"Yes; I have taken off all those dark, dead-looking ebony frames, and made these beautiful gilt and silver ones. That one is made of rice glued on wood and gilded; this of twisted rope, gilded; that of broken cork, silvered; and that of old nails and suspender buttons glued on. Are n't they lovely?

"As you did n't appear to like my efforts in the decorative line, George, I thought I would amuse myself with my needle. I countermanded that order you gave for shirts, and have made this, myself. I have half-a-dozen all cut out. Does n't it fit beautifully? I am going to make your collars and cuffs and neckties, too."

MR. BREEDWELL (to second-hand dealer).—Oh, I don't expect anything for it! How much will you charge to haul it away? And here is a lot of new shirts, collars, cuffs and neckties you can have if you want them.

(BREEDWELL is rebellious; but when he speculates on what might have come next, he is determined to stay at home in self-defense.)
